Windows, Windows, Windows... It is almost unbearable to ask people to improve their PC. The tracker will always be in use by the user of the tracker. The tracker will not be stopped or delayed. It must be able to start and stop independently. The tracker starts by the user clicking a button in the design window. The user must be able to change the location of the button and the default button size. If multiple copies of the design are present on the tracker, it must be possible to independently control them from the same button. Online Through the App Designer interface, the designer will start the application by clicking a button, where the designer can specify the location and size of the application window, and where the button should be located. Once the button is clicked, the designer can direct the tracker to start recording the device and mouse coordinates, either by clicking the button within the window, or by clicking and holding the button while pressing a keyboard key. When the designer closes the application, the tracker will stop tracking, and the user can then press the button again to resume the tracker. When the user moves the mouse, the tracker tracks the mouse coordinates in real time. The tracker reports the coordinates when it starts tracking and when it stops tracking. The tracker reports the mouse coordinates as time passes, or with a rate of 1/millisecond. Local. The user may not open the application while the tracker is running. When the user wants to use the application, he can simply start the application at any time, and then continue tracking normally. The application will not start tracking until the button is clicked to start. Notifications. When the application starts tracking, it will show a notification icon in the notification area. This notification can be disabled in the settings window of the application. It will be disabled by default. The tracker provides two buttons to start and stop recording. The user can press them simultaneously, or press one of them while pressing a key. When pressing the button, the tracker will start recording. When pressing the button again while tracking, the tracker will stop recording. The position of the mouse when the user stops tracking with a button will be saved. In order to change the position, the user must move the mouse to the new position and then click the button again. Display. The tracker includes a fully 3D viewer. If the mouse coordinates are not recorded, a 2D overlay of the screen is presented. The tracker allows you to specify 82157476af
